Notes on drones

Drones are not intended primarily for direct repression. Their main functions are surveillance, information gathering, and delivery of supplies such as packages, medicine, and light equipment. Their constant presence creates an atmosphere of control and observation more than open violence. In a crisis or absolute emergency, however, some models can be used in combat. Their weapons are nonlethal electrical discharges meant to disable a target temporarily. The shocks may cause paralysis, spasms, or a momentary loss of control without aiming to kill. This function is exceptional and regulated. Use it as a narrative tool: a quick intervention, controlled escalation, or a reminder that the system favors control over destruction.
