Notes on the Protocol Unified for Regulation and Gestion of Extremes

PURGE is not an enemy; it is an SU decision made physical. Each city has one PURGE. By the time it deploys, the SU has already decided that an anomaly must be erased. PURGE does not patrol, threaten, or negotiate. It comes to end a situation judged irreversible. In play, PURGE should force an immediate escape or sacrifice, shatter any illusion of control or heroism, and remind the players that the SU can always escalate its violence. PURGE does not pursue survivors for long: if they flee, the immediate correction is complete. If the players fight it head-on, make it clear quickly that each aggressive action causes a decisive neutralization nearby. PURGE is never there by chance. Its presence means someone, perhaps the players themselves, has already been condemned, even if the players do not know who.
